When I arrived at Delaware Valley College in 2007, I was quickly taken in by a college with great potential. There was a spirit of confidence present that was unique and infectious. As President, I set out to use DelVal's many resources – its talented faculty and staff, the legacy of its noble beginning, its resilience and optimism – to help transform the college into a university of stature and reputation.

I am happy to report that the groundwork has been completed and the transformation has begun.

Like it has in the past, the college worked together as a unit during the past fiscal year and pushed for continuous improvement. The contributions extended through nearly every department.

All this energy was funneled into an aggressive, far-reaching, strategic plan. The plan has become a document of action rather than a forgotten shelf fixture. It is alive and robust, a reflection of talented project managers and a hard-working army of committee members. Its breadth is wide. No part of the college is untouched by it.

With the beginning of the plan’s earnest execution, change is clearly evident. In the end, the plan will have taken an often misunderstood and sometimes unnoticed college and made it:

- A high-performance organization dedicated to multi-disciplinary academic excellence.
- A university with a three-college structure and a fourth division for Graduate, Professional and Entrepreneurial Studies.
- A place where students learn in the classroom and in the work place.
- An institution with a voice that facilitates discussion and seeks solutions to the world’s problems.
- A magnet for the best minds and the best intentions.

I’m both proud of and excited by what has been done and what will be done at Delaware Valley College. It is a testament to will, vision and aspiration.

Assuredly, the work ahead will not be easy, but the transformation – with a great headwind – has indeed begun. I invite you to read more about it in the pages that follow, and to consider becoming a worthy part of it.

Sincerely,

Dr. Joseph S. Brosnan, President
Something dynamic was happening.

That became clear when proud alumni during Homecoming mistakenly referred to Delaware Valley College as a university. There had been so much change recently, so much talk about this and other exciting possibilities, that they just assumed the plans for university status had been completed and approved.

That won’t come until 2014. Even so, DelVal has been advancing with a laser-like focus on its mission to achieve a higher level of ... everything.

“We are no longer a striving institution,” President Joseph S. Brosnan likes to say. “We are a thriving institution.”

During the summer, a frequent sight on campus was the trucks of contractors, builders and service people. Staff members tried but couldn’t keep up with the projects.

“… Looks like the new equipment for the lab renovations has arrived.”

“… Have you seen the woodwork they’ve installed in the Shapiro wing?”

“ … When does the new landscaping go in at the Student Center?”

Few could recall so much positive activity. It goes beyond simple construction.
“We are not just seeking university status,” said Richard Reif, a college trustee and CEO of Doylestown Hospital. “We are evolving into an organization that is going to reach out and impact students in a new way. We are evolving into something far more meaningful than a name change.”

DelVal’s evolution comes at a time when many colleges are cutting back on programs, halting building and freezing salaries. DelVal managed to avoid this fate. In fact, it is on better financial footing than perhaps it has ever been. When small parcels of land near the college came on the market, DelVal invested in them.

“We have come out of this recession in better shape than we went in,” President Brosnan said in his fall State of the College address.

The improvements are a product of an ambitious, multi-faceted strategic plan that began taking shape five years ago. The plan, formally approved in 2010, was initiated by a team of about 25 staff, faculty and trustees, but it is being brought to fruition by hundreds. Almost from the start, it began to transform the college.

That transformation is more than sustainable. It has become part of the college culture.

Indeed, if the year could be described in just a few words, they would be these: The Momentum Continues.
REFLECTIONS of forward

As the strategic plan was achieving very specific goals, general operations brought about welcomed results of their own. For the ninth straight year, DelVal was recognized by U.S. News & World Report as one of the best colleges in the Northeast. Indeed, it moved up six places in the ranking. It also was honored by the Princeton Review, which placed DelVal on its list of top colleges in the region.

An assortment of noteworthy turns continued. Some were institutional; some were personal. All were reflections of forward movement:

• As of June 30, the endowment more than doubled. It was a remarkable year of giving, with $32.4 million received. In a study by the National Association of College and University Business Officers, Delaware Valley College was ranked first among 823 institutions in year-over-year endowment growth, with an increase of 120 percent.

• Student retention improved, as did average SAT scores. Meanwhile, DelVal's enrollment pool grew.

• Chemistry instructor Ron Petruso, working with students, earned a patent for his process of extracting biofuel from tobacco leaves.

• Russell Redding, the dean of agriculture and environmental sciences, was appointed by U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack to chair the national Advisory Committee on Biotechnology and 21st Century Agriculture.

• For the third time, Dr. Jim O’Connor, a media and communications professor, had one of his plays produced off-Broadway.

• DelVal developed its own mobile application, bringing news and information about the college to cell phones.

• Classes began at the new Gemmill Campus in Jamison.

Supporting these and other accomplishments was a stronger, more engaged leadership team.

“Dr. Brosnan and some remarkably talented people are making it all happen,” Trustee Reif said. “They have high energy and deep experience.”

“Dr. Brosnan and some remarkably talented people are making it all happen,” Trustee Reif said. “They have high energy and deep experience.”
movement
Recruitment and development of the Board of Trustees now receives added significance, time, attention and importance. It is recognized as critical to the future of the college. The most recent appointees, exhibiting a wide range of skills and backgrounds, are:

- Helen Piszek Nelson, co-chair of the Copernicus Society of America.
- W. Thomas Lomax ’87, of The Lomax Companies.
- Charles J. Alpuche ’81, a retired PepsiCo executive now doing consulting.
- Elizabeth (Betsy) Gemmill, lawyer, corporate executive and head of the Warwick Foundation.
- Eric Compton, worldwide general manager for Ortho Clinical Diagnostics.
Key cabinet and staff positions also were filled.

In July, Dr. Bashar Hanna was named vice president for academic affairs and dean of faculty. Dr. Hanna is the former associate provost at Ithaca College in Ithaca, N.Y. At Temple University, he earned his B.A. in biology, his M.A. in developmental biology and his Ph.D. in developmental neurobiology.

“Dr. Hanna has a deep and diverse academic background that is a critical asset for DelVal,” Dr. Brosnan said.

At Ithaca College, a selective school in New York with approximately 478 full-time faculty members and about 6,760 students, Dr. Hanna provided leadership in the areas of academic assessment, academic enrichment services, grants and sponsored projects, fellowships and scholarships and the college’s Integrative Learning Initiative.

Before that, he served as dean of Arts and Sciences and interim provost at Kutztown University, and was associate dean of Science and Technology and assistant vice provost at Temple University, among other positions.

In March, Norm Jones became the new vice president of enrollment management and athletics. He is the former vice president for enrollment and marketing at Texas Lutheran University in Seguin, Texas. In November, Dr. James Moryan was appointed to the newly created position of interim dean for graduate, professional and entrepreneurial studies. Dr. Moryan formerly served as clinical instructor at Kean University in Union, N.J.

Meanwhile, Trustee Michael Moss, who joined the board in 2009, was selected as campaign chairman for the college’s five-year, $50 million fund-raising campaign, now in the silent phase. Moss is the managing director and presiding chair of Team Capital Bank’s Bucks County region. He will be helping to raise money that will support the strategic plan.

In addition, six new faculty members were hired.

It didn’t take long for the refreshed leadership team to get noticed.

“I think we are making tremendous progress as a college,” said Dr. James Trainer, chairman of the Board of Trustees. “The board is incredibly impressed with the work of the senior staff and our new trustees. I’m enthusiastic about the future of Delaware Valley College.”
The future is indeed happening at Delaware Valley College, with progress almost daily. Volumes would be required to detail all of what has been done, all of what is being done, and all of what will be done.

The continuing momentum and accompanying transformation had its inception with the approval of the strategic plan. The plan outlines a new, shared vision that calls for DelVal to become an exemplary small, private, teaching university known for programs in agricultural and environmental sciences, the life and physical sciences, business, humanities, and graduate studies. The college intends to distinguish itself through the application of experiential learning, interdisciplinary endeavors, and the art and science of personal teaching, both at the undergraduate and graduate levels.

The plan establishes 10 major strategic goals. Over 40 strategies are identified, which are supported by over 100 initiatives. All this is represented in a clear, simple diagram called, “Vision for a University.”

That diagram illustrates a new three-college structure, adds a fourth division for graduate, professional and entrepreneurial studies, and links everything together with experiential learning and interdisciplinary studies.
As the momentum continues, the college is:

- Realigning academic departments toward the new structure.
- Working with an architect on renderings for a new Life Sciences Center.
- Providing students with more undergraduate research opportunities.
- Preparing a fall rollout of a new Experiential Learning program. It will give students more out-of-classroom training via internships, professional conferences, student teaching, study abroad, business partnerships and more.
- Developing new marketing plans that firmly establish DelVal’s institutional identity and make clear its value and promise to students.
- Instituting a framework and practices that will allow DelVal to operate as a high-performance organization.

... and this is just a short summary.
SCHOLARSHIP ascends
Always at the core, always at the heart, is academics.

Teaching and learning are not static at Delaware Valley College. Upgrades, improvements and additions have come via an exciting assemblage of work by scholars and administrators. The recent focus has been on graduate studies.

“The depth and breadth of our graduate programs allows each student to view his or her profession in a unique and different way,” said Dr. Hanna. “The programs provide students with an enhanced ability to interpret, analyze, and design solutions to events in both their professional and personal lives. By presenting each student with a synergistic education, they gain the tools necessary to effectively respond to the challenges of their professional world.”

At the start of the last fiscal year, DelVal had two master’s programs. It needs as least five to qualify as a university. It now has three, and two additional proposals have been sent to the Pennsylvania Department of Education for approval. Other master’s programs are in the planning stages, as is a doctoral program.

Recently approved was a master’s in teaching and learning designed for Pennsylvania and New Jersey teachers. In the works is a master’s in counseling psychology, with specializations in child and adolescent therapy and social justice. Also pending is a master’s in policy studies, with specializations in food and agricultural policy, environmental policy and development policy.

In addition, a certification program for supervision of special education was written, approved, and is ready to be offered.

There are considerable expenses associated with these new programs, but the college is committed to them. Policy studies, for example, will require $20,000 to $30,000 just in annual library resources. All start-up costs are being covered by the President’s Initiative Fund and will not impact the operating budget.

“The group involved in the planning decided these would be really high-quality programs, with no shortcuts,” said Dr. Jack Schmidt, who chairs multiple departments at the college and assisted with the proposals. “At the end of the day, the administration supported our vision for a quality graduate school.”
After everything is measured and analyzed, inspected and researched, looked at from the left and the right and from up and down; after think tanks report in, after algorithms are written and the data is sorted, there is but one truth: College is for the student.

“I believe our total purpose for being there is to bring value to the students,” said Trustee Reif.

In every way, all the strategic planning initiatives are aimed at increasing that value. Evidence of it is visible. Reif said he saw that recently in the bright face and glowing words of Margaret Levicoff, a counseling psychology major at DelVal.

Margaret, a junior, was one of several students who spoke at the December board meeting. She gave a report on a college-financed trip to San Diego to attend the 41st Annual Conference of the International Society for Exploring Teaching and Learning. She went with Dr. Allison Buskirk-Cohen, a counseling psychology faculty member, and Kyla Dannelke, a senior who graduated last year.

Margaret said she considered herself privileged to be able to fly across the country and directly interact with professionals.

“I was truly impressed by the relationship that developed between students and faculty at the San Diego conference,” Reif said. “It was more powerful than what you learn from a book or in a classroom. This student saw her professor in a new light, and it touched her.”

Speaking to the trustees and the cabinet, Margaret put it this way: “I’m so blessed, I’m so lucky to have this kind of education.”

She is but one of many students who have been caught up in the momentum, who have experienced something beyond their expectations. Margaret represents DelVal’s reason for being; its reason for moving ahead. Delaware Valley College has become a force for improvement that results not just in a better college, but better students, better citizens and – ultimately – a better world.

The DelVal momentum, with the help of the trustees, the faculty, cabinet, staff and students like Margaret, will not diminish. No decline is expected in the need for bright people capable of finding solutions to global problems, which is why forward is DelVal’s only viable direction.

As a college and as a university, DelVal will not turn back. It will not deviate. Its mission and vision are firm. It will continue to make a difference.

An institution that once strived now thrives. The transformation has begun.
